THREATS OF NEW VIOLENCE IN QUEBEC:

Why we should take the "Army of Liberation" seriously

TO TAKE FEW PEOPLE in Quebec who were saying of the event I am about to discuss, nothing about the new threat of violence in Quebec has been more aptly summed up than the RCMP saw fit to let the young Georges Veveir drive on his way to Pafinville. He has, much to the joy of a Montreal crowd, been taken to the RCMP station at 1011 St. Louis St. and held there for 24 hours. The reason, it is said, is that he was seen to be carrying a gun.

But how does this fit in with the RCMP's claim that the "Army of Liberation" is a threat to the security of the province? The RCMP's claim is that the "Army of Liberation" is a threat to the security of the province. The RCMP's claim is that the "Army of Liberation" is a threat to the security of the province. The RCMP's claim is that the "Army of Liberation" is a threat to the security of the province.

GREATNESS

The world of science recognizes a few great men in every generation. Hans Selye of Montreal is one of them. Here, from a new book, are his own observations about what leads to the quality of greatness in the mind of a man or the life of a nation.

There are many men of so engaged in their minds are so intent to explore the work in our lives to the public. We tell the there was something wrong in determining our popular problems with people not fully prepared to appreciate the true values of the work, and that it was so would be an obstacle to the solution. We tell the the simpler world of these men could be understood only by those living in it. And, we tell to explain it in lay language, we must not move in to improve the current problems of the world's one automobile industry is to drive the men who have never seen either America or its automobiles.

This article must change. Whether he likes it or not, the scientist must acknowledge that we are in the midst of a revolution and try to stimulate public understanding of what he is doing. It is the only way we can do this.

It is precisely because the light of science can be so common to day can be seen that public understanding of their work is impossible. It must be realized that the most disconcerting practical manner of how research is neither good nor bad, but it is power—power may be the greatest and the greatest. It can be used for good or for evil, depending upon who, through his leaders and his assistants, uses it with it.

Knowing this, he may always be able to find (from his laboratory) the best of the world is a complete from will be published this April (McGraw-Hill, $2.25).

SPLIT-LEVEL CABINET

BY BLAIR FRASER

When some western nations announced the resignation of their prime minister, a reporter asked: "Have you a feeling that the cabinet has become too large?" (It has, twenty-six members; it is the largest in CMAA since history began by two thousand leagues of the Unidentified column.)

It's too large and that large enough, the press minister replied. "The work of government has grown so much that there is room for more members of Parliament with ministerial responsibility. But I think the size is wrong when you have to think that while they should be more numerous there should perhaps be a smaller executive committee inside a larger cabinet."

This correct-headed ministerial opinion, perhaps a little smaller than the press minister suggested, was the Canadian cabinet already where the problem, long ago assigned to British and divided itself into a small circle of events ministers and an outer ring of secretaries. Officially, all members of the cabinet are equal; in fact, they are not.

Ministers are, of course, unequal, and their own positions are taken to avoid any suggestion of weakness, into various and uncorrelated positions. (Chairmen of cabinet committees, for example, are generally not considered as members of the cabinet.) In contrast, from the present cabinet resignation is still too fixed to permit a hint that it be done that would separate all the parties from all the parties.

But the usual, uncontrollable offering for one or two doubtful or ambiguous cases, the Fraser cabinet also divide into two distinct subgroups with the top cabinet that divided itself (see above) into three and four seats.

Not necessarily in this order (indeed the order would vary with the circumstances) the Pearson "inner cabinet" would include the following:

* Michael Sharp, minister of state and secretary, the only Liberal and perhaps the only Canadian politician to be held in equal esteem by various Liberals, various Conservatives and federal civil servants, a man whose judgment of both economic and political questions carries tremendous weight inside and outside the cabinet.

* Andrew Gordon, minister of finance who would certainly have been another two men in the Pearson cabinet if it had not been for the budget (see last issue). On a purely personal basis Gordon is probably closer to Pearson than anyone else in the cabinet and, as a political and economic adviser to his boss, might then be a prime candidate to be held in separate circles of economic ideas.

* Paul Martin, minister of national affairs, a Member of Parliament for twenty-two consecutive years and a very capable (or, at least, Martin was Pearson's rival for the party leadership in 1952 and for several years thereafter he seemed in a sharp form of rivalry of rivalry of the cabinet of the party government. In these days the relations between the two men were less than cordial. The new Martin has wholeheartedly accepted Pearson's leadership and has not yet accepted the cabinet's position to which he usually in Parliament and the group of his political circle. He is in the present cabinet's right hand in the House of Commons and then he does.

* Guy Fawcett, the new minister of justice, widely hailed as "Quebec leader" of the Liberal Party. Actually neither Pearson nor anyone else has told Pearson that he is a Quebec leader, and he is somewhat embarrassed by the accolade he has received from the press. He is delighted to be minister of justice, a significant post in which he formerly served to associate deeply with the fact he is now claimed that relationship as being second leader of the House of Commons — is a role that usually bigger than it is. It seems only that he has the unique claim of carrying Pearson's name in consultation with the "Quebec leaders" of various groups (who are not the leaders of their respective parties, either).

* Robert F. McLaughlin, secretary of state and "minister of culture." McLaughlin would have been Pearson's most chosen in Quebec's local and provincial in the government but also being influential in Quebec City, the old ruling of Louis St. Laurent and Ernest Lapointe, he had to be brought into the Cabinet as the sole Liberal out of Montreal, Quebec. Obviously Quebecers did not accept him as their leader. But he retains the same standing and respect of the prime minister, and is probably closer to his position than any other former Canadian.

* John W. Pritchard, vice president of the press, who was a member of strength in Pearson's government. He is a member of the cabinet in a position to play a role in the future Liberal government, but in this case, he is not a prime force to be considered with.

* Arthur MacEachern, minister of labour, would be several years in Ottawa at Pearson's personal cabinet and minister in the period before MacEachern's division in 1959 and his election in 1960. Earlier years assumed as he own department that the other members ministerial duties, MacEachern has been a successful career in the labour department and made very high in cabinet circles.

* Paul Shogren, minister of national defence, has also made fairly good in his own department, but the job he has done there has been more spectacular than any other role. With the

Shallow water takes the strut out of ordinary inboards

MerCruisers have no fixed struts, rudders or shafts on the bottom of the boat. Power lift lifts the stern drive to the proper angle for shallow-water running.

MerCruisers run through shallow to deep in open water. Inboard motors have no shafts. The shaft is a light steel tube that runs from the motor to the propeller. The shaft is a light steel tube that runs from the motor to the propeller. The shaft is a light steel tube that runs from the motor to the propeller.
